These are all the databases, you don't need to install anything on your computer because if something goes wrong you can use this tool and delete the databases. There are more ways to find out the name of the package but one that I can think of in a very quick way is through the command line so simply go to your terminal and open it (Applications->Accessories->Terminal). A quick way of doing this would be something like this: `dpkg -l | grep -i database` it will give you the list of all the packages that started with database, as I said, you don't need to be root to do f678ea9f9e
